If you are newsletter it's because you inquired or someone has slipped your my way, and please understand this is just a bragging electronic Wood Shop where I specialize in woodturning.

I've kept myself somewhat busy this past year with a few Studio walk ins and online sales, but the biggest contributors have been because of commission work from two of my main collectors as well as dear friends, mahalo nui loa gentlemen. As a one-man shop, I'm about booked up for commission work but if you are interested in a meaningful piece of work, I'm always ready to listen and discuss ideas. So, along with my current commission workload, I'm trying to complete a few new speculative pieces targeted for release in early 2021. With all of the above-mentioned work ongoing we have revamped and will continually update my websites with many thanks to Patrick Rodgers of Rodgers Engineering for his assistance. Patrick is now handling my website upgrading duties, his website <https://rodgersengineering.com>. Hopefully you will find my updated website more shopper friendly with more changes planned in the near future so please visit; <https://www.turningsbyedric.com/> or feel free to visit my original website created in 1999 www.edricflorence.com kept active with a great deal of information.

We often hear and read about fans loving my creations but simply can't afford my work, I fully understand and I can sympathize with you. As a result, I've taken to creating a few smaller and less expensive pieces, and creating a "Second's" Shelf for the economically minded fans. And, for those who are local we strongly suggest that a private viewing of my work is your best way to see and understand the nuances of this artform, perhaps you may even see what's in-the-works (looking at and appreciating my work is still free). To new fans, viewing my work at the Studio you would have the opportunity to see pieces in-the-works with the possibility of purchasing it before it is released.

Joyce and I have on occasion hosted a few friends who have brought along new fans, but, please do so through an appointment. For first time visitors the studio has a separate entrance and we welcome those who are interested in browsing or looking for a special gift.

Thank you, Edric
